Impact Report

Letter from the Leadership

Dear Friends,

As we reflect on the past year, we are thankful for those who make up the NWCF community – our partner agencies, donors, event sponsors, volunteers, and you – for showing steadfast commitment to children and families. The short- and long-term effects of the pandemic and significant health inequities continue to impact children and families in our region. At the same time, we celebrate the life-changing impact of the work happening each day, whether it is a family that has found stable housing after homelessness, or the young man who is setting and reaching his own goals with the help of his mentor (see Partner Agency Spotlight on page 11).

In the upcoming pages, you will see a snapshot of what the NWCF community has accomplished in the past year. Here are some of the highlights:

Another amazing year of investment

Thanks to your partnership, we invested $1M in programs lifting up children, youth, and families. Our partner agencies are a continuous source of inspiration. Their staff on the ground know firsthand what kids and young people are experiencing right now, what they need, and what serves them best. As they adapt and respond with creativity and determination to the enormous challenges of their clients, they have underscored how NWCF is providing critical support.

Strength in community

For real change to happen, we need to recognize and honor community voices, community expertise, and the power of lived experience. Our 2022 Forum, Buffering Intergenerational Trauma: Child Well-Being and Community Resilience, focused on the strengths intrinsic within our communities and how we can honor them when we work with children. Our five Forum speakers – “united by hope,” in the words of panelist moderator Dr. Ben Danielson – shone a light on a community-based approach to healing. Although we came together virtually, we felt the powerful effect of learning, listening, and finding inspiration together.

What's coming next

We have listened deeply to those working directly with children and families and have learned about their needs beyond funding. In response, we are expanding our educational outreach to fill the gap in affordable and high-value education for those in the field. We will be sharing more about this endeavor in the upcoming year. Meanwhile, we continue our long-term commitment to children and families in our communities and to the agencies that work with them. You will see in the following pages that we have committed to multiyear, unrestricted funding for nearly two-thirds of our partner agencies.

In short, we are working hard and feeling hopeful. Despite ongoing challenges, we are optimistic because we know the NWCF community is strong, resilient, and committed to change.

NW Children's Foundation works to end the intergenerational cycle of child abuse, neglect, and trauma.

We envision a world in which all children thrive in safe, equitable, and nurturing communities.

Our mission can only be fulfilled by putting racial equity and social justice at the center of every aspect of our work.

Thanks to your generosity, we were able to provide outreach and grants impacting critical points in the cycle of child abuse, neglect, and trauma.

Partner Agency Spotlight

Friends of the Children

Friends of the Children–Seattle partners with community organizations, schools, and foster care systems to identify children ages 4 to 6 facing the toughest systemic barriers, pairing them with a professional mentor from kindergarten through high school.

Richmond became Damarion’s professional mentor when Damarion was in fifth grade. Throughout the struggles of middle school and high school, Richmond partnered closely with Damarion’s family to help him build the skills he needed to succeed socially and academically.

Over the years, Damarion and Richmond have spent their time together working on Damarion’s goals.

“He really dedicates himself to anything that has to do with getting him prepared for the next thing,” said Richmond.

When Damarion wanted to focus on health, they worked out together. Before Damarion got his license, Richmond helped him study for his driver’s test. When Damarion was on the field for a football game or track meet, Richmond was a familiar face in the stands. Richmond describes their relationship as more of a partnership.

Damarion’s Next Goal: College Bound

Damarion recently graduated from high school with a full-ride scholarship to Huston-Tillotson University in Austin, Texas, where he will study education. Richmond knows that Damarion is ready to take on these exciting changes. He’s also confident that their relationship will remain strong.

“It might not be week to week, but it’s not going to stop,” said Richmond.

When Damarion’s next goal comes around, they’ll tackle it together.

“We are grateful for NW Children’s Foundation’s committed partnership. They are truly an example of how important partnerships like these are to sustain our 12-plus-year journey alongside our youth as they realize their power to achieve their goals and dreams.”

– Lacie West, Executive Director of Friends of the Children–Seattle

Friends of the Children–Seattle is a NWCF Evergreen grantee, receiving a three-year grant of $100,000. Evergreen grantees are longtime partners of NWCF that consistently demonstrate their high impact and effectiveness in halting the intergenerational cycle of trauma, abuse, and neglect.
